ABOLISHED!

BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT
B. RUSSEL-SPROWT

One year ago today, the EU's leaders met to accept the will of the huge demonstrations across the continent and signed the Treaty of Abolition, which ended the 61 year old experiment in international co-operation.

This day twelve months ago crowds of people torched EU flags and passports and welcomed a new era of national and regional pride and indeed a new era of freedom was proclaimed.

Under the Treaty of Abolition, the following key actions were taken:

- ⊗ The right to live, work and vote in 27 other countries ABOLISHED!
- ⊗ Right to emergency hospital care while on holiday abroad SCRAPPED!
- ⊗ The Common Agricultural Policy and Common Fisheries Policy ABOLISHED!
- ⊗ Ability to negotiate with America as an equal at World Trade Talks TRASHED!
- ⊗ All countries sitting as equals at the European table regardless of size ELIMINATED!
- ⊗ All countries, large and small, obeying the same laws on areas like energy supply, customs and protecting the environment DUMPED!
- ⊗ Cash for building colleges, roads and other transport systems HALTED!
- ⊗ Co-operation for fighting drug barons, paedophiles and terrorists CANCELLED!

Paris Hilton surprises paparazzi by being photographed with small dog

Ageing, thrice-divorced millionaire Heiress and still overly publicised human being Paris Hilton was photographed today still providing solid role model advice as to how one holds a small dog in one's handbag in front of the world's media. The heiress to the Hilton fortune also continues to give a clear lesson to young aspiring millionaire heiresses across the world that if they study hard in college, and ensure their grandfather was a hotel tycoon, they too can lead a life of staring blankly at photographers. Ms Hilton recently informed close friends that she no longer wishes to be known by her married name of Hilton-Clooney-Lopez-Kissinger.

Mahon tribunal expects to report before turn of century

Sources in the Attorney General's office have informed The Irish Stun that the Mahon Tribunal will complete its deliberations sometime in the early 2080s, after it has completed the modules covering the more unconventional payments to former political leaders that allegedly came from "rubbing an old lamp and getting three wishes from a bearded Arab gentleman in colourful pyjamas."

Sources close to the politicians stress that the bearded Arab gentleman was a close personal friend who actually offered to let the politician in question live rent free in the lamp if he so required.

Victoria Beckham has "gift" for turning oxygen into carbon dioxide

Scientists have finally declared that Victoria "Posh" Beckham, wife of the former footballer and now ladies shoe designer David Beckham, is one of the most efficient transformers of oxygen to carbon dioxide they've ever met. One told reporters that if she ever had to get out of the 'celebrity' market, she would easily find work standing in greenhouses. "And people said she was useless. Well, who's laughing now?" a jubilant Beckham asked reporters.

European countries beg US & India at US-India-China trade talks

The three main economic powers were subjected to huge lobbying at the World Trade Organisation talks, as former EU countries scrambled with countries such as New Zealand, Bangladesh and Togo for influence ahead of the final decision making round between the big three. The pressure on representatives from European countries was very much open to see as the British Foreign Secretary was caught breaking down in tears when the Indian Foreign Minister refused his pleas. The big three have pledged to consult with Russia, Japan and Brazil before opening negotiations with the rest of the World.

Farmers and shoppers fight pitched battles in Dublin streets over farm solidarity tax

The Public Order Squad of the Irish Garda Siochana were forced to use rubber baton rounds and water cannons in pitched battles on O'Connell Street yesterday as farmers and consumer activists clashed violently over the proposed Farm Solidarity Tax. The FST, which is proposed to fund farming now that the CAP has been abolished, is being strongly opposed by urban consumers who feel that food costs are rising too fast already. Food prices set to increase even further as the new tariff legislation is being fast tracked through the Oireachtas to protect Irish food industries from being priced out of the market by cheaper food imports. Judging by the size of the angry mob that attacked the IFA in Dublin today, the FST seems to be considered a step too far by many.

GOVERNMENT COLLAPSE

The issue is almost certain to cause the collapse of the minority Fianna Fail/ Fine Gael government.

Tariff war breaks out in Europe

Socialist President Laurent Fabius seems almost certain to lose next month's presidential election to the National Front's Jean Marie Le Pen, such has been his failure to restore order to this deeply troubled nation. His much vaunted plan to put a "Wall of Steel" around France to protect French industry and agriculture has led to the double pains of massive rises in prices coupled with the collapse of French exports as other countries levelled retaliatory tariffs on French goods.

Touring the now abandoned Airbus factory in Toulouse, and standing under uncompleted shells of the once revered A380s, Le Pen attacked the president for permitting French goods to be taxed in other countries, especially as the pitiful level of the New Franc has made French goods exceptionally competitive whilst making imports unaffordable to most French people. When challenged on how he would make countries lower their tariffs without France lowering hers, the aging one eyed right winger remarked cryptically that a country with nuclear weapons deserves more respect.

Meanwhile, former President Sarkozy's version of J'Taime, sung with his wife Carla Bruni, remains in European charts at no.1 for the fourth week running.

FLOODING IN EUROPE as President Huckabee denies climate change, calls gravity "unchristian"

President Huckabee said today that despite the widespread flooding encountered in Europe and the southern coast of the US, he still did not believe in global warming.

"And anyway, even if it was happening, it's not like the US can do anything about it. If the US, Japan, and others could present a united front, then maybe we could get serious with India and China. But we can't present a united front, I mean, how on Earth do you get 30 countries in Europe to agree to environmental measures? You'd need some sort of association or union or something... now, 'bout this gravity thing: I've been reading my bible with my dog Skeeter and I don't see it mentioned once..."

Prime Minister Cameron pledges abolition of employment safeguards to woo multinationals

PRIME MINISTER David Cameron has told the House of Commons that if Britain is to woo multinationals to locate in the UK, it will have to get rid of old fashioned concepts like Unfair Dismissals and Redundancy Payments. The Tory leader told the house that the days of multinationals having to obey EU social protection laws in order to access a single European market are long gone.

"The people of this country voted for the rigours of the free market. Well, it's dog eat dog out there, and it's time to take the leash off and let the strong prevail." An unnamed Tory MP said.

NO FOOTY FOR JOHNNY FOREIGNER!

The British National Party has welcomed new proposals from the Football Association to exclude non-English players and managers from working in English football.

A spokesman for the FA told The Irish Stun: "We didn't really have a choice, what with the European right to travel and work being scrapped, it was getting impossible to get visas for non-English players. That and the fact that English players can't get visas to play for European clubs either, so it made sense to recognise the reality. Sure, it means we won't witness the sheer elegance of continental players, but by God there'll be plenty English overpaid thuggish types whose girlfriends dress them, and who spend so much time in the bathroom putting on moisturiser and wearing what looks like their birds' underwear, that we have come to expect from the English game. And what about the managers? Just think, somewhere out there there's another Graham Taylor just waiting to be discovered! We are spoilt for choice!"

A BNP spokesman insisted that only "true" Englishmen should be allowed play the national sport. "None of your foreign blood: None of your Irish, or your Italian Roman blood, or your dirty French Norman blood, or your pirate Scandanavian blood! No, only true Englishmen."

When challenged as to the fact that Britain is in fact a country made up through the centuries of immigrants, the spokesman revealed that a rich BNP supporter had spent over £5 million to find people of pure English lineage, and had succeeded finding two men and one woman of "uncontaminated stock."

"UNCONTAMINATED STOCK"

"And," the spokesperson declared delightedly, "As soon as we reverse the ridiculous Victorian ban on brothers and sisters breeding, we can get down to the business of restocking the great English gene pool. Now, if you'll excuse me, I can't miss my banjo lesson..."

HAVE YOU ALWAYS FELT "DIFFERENT"?

Did you always think that Qualified Majority Voting seemed like a good idea, but were afraid to say down the pub? Do you have literature explaining the Lisbon treaty hiding under a towel in the hot press? GO ON! Come out of the closet and admit it! You're a Pro-European!

"I used to feel ashamed that I just didn't believe fanatical militaristic nationalism was for me. Then I discovered European Unity. It helped me find self-confidence, new friends and build one of the world's greatest industrialised economies."
Konrad Adeneur, German Chancellor.
